Learning in the 21st century: Why it’s different, why it matters and how to help children thrive through the paradigmatic shifts of the rapidly evolving digital world.

The traditional model of school is going through an uncomfortable transition as a result of the information revolution. Navigating the changes in schooling today is extremely difficult for parents, caregivers and educators. The massive shifts leave many parents, students and educators feeling frustrated and resentful about the changes and how to help children thrive. Dwayne will discuss some of the drivers behind the changes and how this global transition will create massive never-before-seen opportunities for children that are prepared to go out to meet this new world head on. This keynote will help participants learn about society-changing technological advances and the effects they will have on the future of today’s children. Participants will also uncover the four main strategic ideas that will help children thrive in a rapidly evolving digital world.
