i If tutorial sections exist, all students must enroll in a tutorial section. Please be assured that students enrolled in the Lecture will be accommodated in a tutorial. When the term starts, if necessary, additional tutorials may be added to accommodate all students enrolled in the course. Keep checking ACORN. More information will be provided during the first class.

In-person lecture sections: Students in this section are permitted to enroll in either in-person or online tutorials/practicals, whichever they prefer. The capacity for this lecture section is determined by room capacity, which is based on current public health restrictions. We hope these restrictions will ease and that we will be able to increase the section capacity.

Online lecture sections: Students in this section are permitted to enroll in either in-person or online tutorials/practicals, whichever they prefer. If the room capacities increase, we hope to be able to move some students from this lecture section into the corresponding in-person section.

For courses with tutorials/practicals: If in-person tutorial/practical sections reach capacity, we will attempt to create more spaces in the in-person tutorials/practicals.

32. ANTC88H3F (2021 Fall) - Special Topics*i "Education, Power, and Potential: Anthropological Perspectives and Ethnographic Insights" (Instructor: M. Cummings)

What does it mean to get an education? What are the consequences of getting (or not getting) a "good education"? What counts as a good education, anyway? For whom? Who decides? Why does it matter? How are different kinds of education oriented toward different visions of the future? What might we learn about a particular cultural context if we explore education and learning as social processes and cultural products linked to specific cultural values, beliefs, and power dynamics? These are just some of the questions we will explore in this course. Overall, students will gain a familiarity with the anthropology of education through an exploration of ethnographic cases studies from a variety of historical and cultural contexts.

This will be an online, asynchronous course. For each week of the course, there will be a list of required tasks to be completed: including watching a lecture and/or other relevant media, completing readings, and participating in a discussion forum. There will also be an OPTIONAL weekly "live" meeting (not a lecture; just to "touch base" and ask questions) as well (day and time to be determined). Students will submit all assessments, including exams, online.

33. ANTD07H3F (2021 Fall) - Advanced Regional Seminar

📌 "The Mediterranean: Cultures, Histories, and Mobilities" (Instructor: A. Sorge)

This course explores the cultures of the Mediterranean region from a comparative perspective. The history of Mediterranean colonialisms, forms of inequality, religion and conflict, gender and violence, origins of mafia, and practices of blood feud will provide a foundational understanding of the historical dynamics of power in the region. We proceed from an understanding of the Mediterranean Sea as a site of encounters and communication across cultural and religious difference. In so doing, we interrogate the easy classification of peoples into large-scale categories such as European, African, Christian, or Muslim, and question the assumptions of the modern nation-state system. As a hybrid space of commonalities and differences, the Mediterranean Sea is a metaphor for the 21st century, and it teaches us that everything is always moving, fluid, and in a state of flux. This fundamental reality is best exemplified by the ongoing refugee crisis in the region, which we will explore through a postcolonial vision that critiques the contemporary European border regime and embraces a Mediterranean vision for the future.

34. ANTD13H3F (2021 Fall) - Frontiers of Anthropology: A Biological Perspective

📌 Fall 2021 Topic: Caveman, Farmer, Herder, Banker: Evolution of Diet in Society

Beginning with archaic Homo sapiens and ending with a discussion of how diet exists in a modern cash economy, this survey course engages a deep time perspective of changes in human diet and attendant societal shifts. We will explore paradigmatic discourse around topics such as big game hunting, diet breadth, and the Agricultural Revolution, while examining what "cavemen" really ate, the importance of pastoralism, why agriculture was not as "revolutionary" as it has been presented, and contextualizing why scientists (and the public) think the way they do about diet in the past and present.

35. ANTD15H3F (2021 Fall) - Frontiers of Socio-Cultural Anthropology

📌 Topic of Fall 2021: Colonial Affect

We can think of affect as what it actually feels like to experience something. Affect centers the body as a feeling body, a responsive and vibrant body, full of sentiment and reflex, in it with others, and moody as all hell. It dissolves the interior/ exterior, body/ mind, subject/ object binaries and troubles the dogma of cultural/ linguistic/ ideological determinism without ever losing sight of the webs of power in which our worldly engagements occur. With that, the guiding question for this course is simply this: what does colonialism feel like? We take up this question from two angles. On the one hand, we will peer into the intimate, sentimental, and carnal spaces of colonial formations, using a focus on affect to try to better understand the somatic and textural experience of life under colonization. On the other hand, we will track the ways affect may become a site of colonial endurance, a realm in which coloniality reveals itself to be an ongoing force in the present, very much there and vital, lodged in the ways we get on with others and ourselves and things, even in societies that would like to declare themselves done with all that. This is an online-synchronous course.

37. ANTD40H3F (2021 Fall) - Topics in Emerging Scholarship in Evolutionary Anthropology

i "Archaeological and Evolutionary Perspectives on the Environment"

The environment influenced and continues to impact our evolution. This course explores environmental studies through archaeology and evolutionary theory. We will discuss the foundational literature on paleoecology to investigate the environmental pressures that shaped the evolution of our species. Each week we will explore unique themes in environmental studies, from the adaptations of non-human primates to ecological worldviews and collapse. The course will weave together discussions on the principal methodologies used to examine environmental changes, including palaeobotanical analysis, zooarchaeology, isotopes, and radiocarbon dating. Students will write critical reviews and a final paper on a topic of their choice related to the environment. In the end, this course will reveal that our relationship to our environment is not a simple one, but through an in-depth exploration we can determine ways to move forward in our ever-changing world.

i "Media Representations and Social Imaginations of Mental Illness" (Instructor: Walter Callaghan)

TV shows, movies, the news, and social media play a significant role in the cultural transmission of ideas and formulation of a popular collective imagination, yet we do not often think critically about how these media shape our evaluations of self, our relations with others, and our ethical and political commitments. This course examines how media representations of mental health issues affect our understanding of and interaction with individuals who experience psychological distress, both positively and negatively. Ranging from mainstream movies to informative documentaries, this course will encourage students to critically reflect on the messaging provided by popular culture and provide them with tools to engage with societal stigma that impacts the lives of many in our shared society.

215. ENGD48H3F (2021 Fall) - Studies in Major Victorian Writers

i Description: Victorian Fantasy. This course will be a study of four writers who are generally left out of the Victorian canon (only one, William Morris, is included in anthologies of the period), but who were major contributors to the development of modern fantasy. George MacDonald, who wrote one of the first portal fantasies along with a series of mythopoeic modern fairy tales, was a major influence on C.S. Lewis, author of the Chronicles of Narnia. William Morris wrote the first immersive, secondary world fantasies in English, and made possible the innovations of J.R.R. Tolkien, Ursula Le Guin, and countless other fantasy world-builders. Edith Nesbit wrote more than sixty novels, many of them fantasies for children, as well as one of the first time-travel fantasies. Lord Dunsany was a prolific writer of short stories, originating cosmogonic fantasy, weird tales, and sword and sorcery. All four writers were social outsiders, in spite of their class privilege, with commitments (in the case of Morris and Nesbit especially) to radical politics. We will consider what Victorian fantasy contributes to the development of the genre, as well as its important role in subverting the social status quo.

216. ENG59H3F (2021 Fall) - Topics in American Poetry

i Description: Walt Whitman. In this course we will read through most of the major poems of one of America's greatest poets. Whitman wrote most of his best work in the middle of the 19th century, but he was ahead of his time as a prophet of cultural inclusivity, and he thought of himself as speaking directly to readers in a progressive future. We will place his groundbreaking free-verse poems in their own moment, but we will also relate them to present-day concerns.

217. ENGD71H3F (2021 Fall) - Studies in Arab North American Literature

i Description: This is a seminar course that will examine writings by Arab Canadian and Arab American authors, with a focus during the fall of 2021 on the concept of home in selected Arab North American works of fiction. In this context, our critical and reflective conversations approach "home" as individual/collective places, feelings, spaces, practices, states of being, creations, constructions, and/or reconstructions. Ultimately, our course aims at highlighting the heterogeneity and the plurality of Arab diasporic experiences and identities as well as their intersecting and shared historical and cultural continuities. No knowledge of the Arabic language, culture and history is needed.
